Claremont Colleges Digital Library

The CCDL at this very moment displays 99,927 objects, of which the Nag Hammadi papyri form 2,142. Unfortunately the level of organisation leaves something to be desired, as these for instances are divided into coptic manuscripts \(papyri\) \(762\) and manuscripts, coptic \(papyri\) \(1380\). The best way to enter the collection is to find the NHA entry itself, which presents 2,225 objects – among which also some photographs of people and objects ‘round and about’. The default sort is on ‘relevance’, a highly dubious term that should be abolished from web pages as I yet have to come across the very first one that indeed shows me what is relevant to me. The sort order can be changed to one on Title, but unfortunately this is a so-called string sortation, left-to-right, and it ignores numeric values: after papyrus 19 comes 2, then 20. An additional frustration is the fact that the Title isn’t perfectly organised and validated, and contains seemingly minor differences such as “Codex X papyrus page 9” and “Codex X papyrus pages 16 and 18” where the latter indeed comes after the former because of this sort order. Other hindrances include “Codex I , papyrus page 9” (space before comma), “Codex III papyrus page 142” (missing comma), “Codex IV papyri pages 28 and 57”, “Codex IV, D and E” (extra space) and so on: the CCDL is clearly missing some much-needed finishing touch. Seven instances of “papyrus”, 76 “papyri”, “back fly” versus “flyleaf back”, and so on.

I have created for myself a list of all papyri, and thought that it would be beneficial to share this. Mine comes in two, given the fact that there is a low-resolution photo for each entry, and a very high resolution one as well. What is behind the low-resolution however is an enormously well thought out and modern architecture called IIIF (generally pronounced “triple-eye-eff”) that offers incredible possibilities, the International Image Interoperability Framework, but the initial picture provided is low-resolution. Terms like low-resolution and high-resolution don’t really apply anymore, those were useful in the nineties. Given the fact that this list contains a few thousand entries, I have decided not to provide the full resolution link, as firing off the full list for that one would result in a bandwidth hog demand of some 6 to 7 gigabytes of data, a clever form of modern DOS perhaps

Order

To fix the order, the Titles have been validated: missing commas have been added, plurals have been changed into singular, and in general all terms have been aligned and pruned.

The numbering has been fixed by prefixing leading zeroes to them which ensures that any ordering will present them as numbers.

Some entries provide two pages, and are labelled e.g. “Codex I, papyrus pages 042 and 43”. In order for those to appear in the right order they have been duplicated and exist both as “Codex I, papyrus page 069 and 16” as well as “Codex I, papyrus page 016 and 69”. There was a handful specials such as flyleaves in combination with regular pages but I have mostly left those alone. The lists contain only items that refer to pages; unidentified fragments, cartonnage, covers and bindings and all that has been left out.

Not all leaves are present in the CCDL; Codex XII leaves 15-28 are missing, for example, and here and there individual leaves from other Codices are missing as well. If you find anything that is not in my list, I would be much obliged when notified of that: my email link is on my profile.
